The people of southern and central Mississippi may be hopeless and incapable of toil; but elsewhere southern farmers rise superior to all losses and disasters, and there is solid progress and prosperity. At this hour, whatever despondent editors may say to the contrary, Memphis is the most prosperous city, and its merchants and banks in better condition than any center of trade and population in the valley of the Mississippi. The Beacon doubtless paints accurately the condition of the country in which it lives. Its county boasts of perhaps the largest relative colored voting population in the south, and its governments, State and county, are desperately bad. Why should a people toll when adventurers, in countless offices and sinctures, absorb all profits of industry? We are wont to deplore the absence of manufactories. How can these exist in Mississippi, when governments so tax farmers that there is no inducement to produce even bread and bacon? There must be cheap food and cheap clothing and cheap untaxed homes if we would compete in cheap manufactures with communities never burdened as are the wretched people of many counties in Mississippi. Memphis recognizes, to some extent, the same evils, and nothing so paralyzes the arm of industry, as all human history shows, as the abstraction by governments of the proper rewards of toll. Then, too, the Begcon finds that two races will not labor in the same workshops or in the same fields. Before the war negroes hated and despised "poor white trash." Even then the two races were almost perfectly segregated. Whites lived in the poorer districts, while countless negroes swarmed on broad plantations in sugar, rice and cotton-producing lowlands. The instinct of race is stronger now than in former years, and the races in each successive year are further and further removed from one another. It is this native repulsion which drives white people into over-crowded villages, converting well-to-do clodhoppers into wretched peddling, and, finally, bankrupt tradesmen. Villages of white inhabitants have grown amazingly everywhere in densely negro-populated districts; but farms have become desolate and houses and fences rot even as do public and private morals. Will the Boucon tell what facts begat this unnatural "laziness?" Are there proper inducements to toil? Are not all profits of industry swept away by the countless courts. and numberless place-holders in Mississippl? Our State government is beneficent and cheap enough, compared with that of Mississippl; but the antagonism of races, which expels both from agricultural pursuits, and burdens imposed by towns and counties, cause the idleness and ruin of southern communities, and we have reason for self gratulation that no village or county in the vicinity of Memphis suffers from that utter paralysis which destroys the prosperity of the district which the Beacon

Villainy follows the track of Clayton Just as naturally as slime follows. The supreme court of Spain upholds Archbishop Llorente against the pope, and Ex-Captain Jovellows the track of the water-moceasin as it glides from the green scum of the banishment from the island. Arkansas learned that he was in their midst they knew that some deviltry was on band, and the coup d'etat of Joe Brooka is the result. The people of Arkansas, just as they were congratuating themselves on the prospect of peace, tranquility, freedom, enfranchisement and prosperity are to be bedeviled with increased taxes and excited by new enmities, in order that the Radicals may perpetuate their hold upon the throat and pockets of the tax-payers.
